What is the ENAR?

The ENAR therapy device is a hand-held, battery operated, therapeutic medical device, for personal use. The ENAR or Electro-Neuro-Adaptive-Regulator, delivers natural, non-invasive, non-toxic, computer-modulated, interactive nerve innervation electro-stimulation, onto and through the skin.

Where did ENAR come from?

The ENAR's interactive neuro stimulation technology was developed by Russian scientists who received a Lenin prize for it, and now it is becoming a more popular mainstream pain therapy modality with many applications used around the World.

What can the ENAR achieve?

Australian health practitioners and members of the public are using ENAR devices to good effect to relieve pain. They find that the ENAR may have a profound effect on both chronic and acute painful conditions and injuries that may not respond to other forms of treatment. The ENAR is also used to locate hidden, referred and primary treatment points in ways that might not be evident by other means.

A Macquarie University randomised control trial using ENAR versus conventional TENS has been conducted in Sydney and this showed 'significant and sustained results' for both chronic pain relief, related disability reduction and functional improvements. (copy of full research report available).

How does ENAR work?

The ENAR is used to find and treat 'key points'. Key Points are the tell-tale signs of problems or difference that can be detected when using the ENAR device on the skin. The ENAR's interactive therapeutic electro stimulation process fuses 'Bio-feed-back' and 'Bio-feed-forward' in a 'real time' dialogue with the nervous system to prompt unfavourably painful areas to return to more responsive nerve innervation. Ultimately there are at least two common explanations for the ENAR's therapeutic effectiveness. The Bio-Chemical explanation suggests the ENAR prompts the release of neuro-peptides, generating a cascade of natural relief hormones. The Bio-Energetic view suggests the ENAR clears and regulates the neuro-innervation of nerve energy pathways and so helps restore the flow of energy and information, and this facilitates both the pain relief and its associated functional improvement.

ACHE Therapy Strategy

ENAR's 'ACHE Therapy Strategy' helps you to answer the question, "What type of ACHE is that?" Acute, (recent &/or traumatic) will need a quicker more frequent approach, compared to more long-standing Chronic pain problems, or more complex problems that may require a more Holistic or Energetic pain treatment approach.
